

As a professor in America's leading School of Cinema-Television, I am appalled at the current actions being undertaken by Sinclair Broadcasting. Their decision to force their stations to air an anti-Kerry documentary days before the election is a clear example of the dangers of media consolidation and represents a direct assault on the tenants of broadcasting in this country. It is crucial that the FCC take a leadership role on this issue in order to ensure that they are acting in the public's interest and not merely serving corporate mandates.

Sinclair uses the public airwaves free of charge, and is obligated by law to serve the public interest. But when large companies control the airwaves, we get more of what's good for the bottom line and less of what we need for our democracy. Instead of something produced at "News Central" far away, it's more important that we see real people from our own communities and more substantive news about issues that matter.

Sinclair's actions show why we need to strengthen media ownership rules, not weaken them. They show why the license renewal process needs to involve more than a returned postcard. Thank you.

Sincerely,
